NO MOTHER-IN-LAW IN HIS'N.

John Crafter's Method Fully In-dorsed by His Honor Snell. dorsed by Mis Honor Snell.

In the Police Court to-day rather a wrecked-looking person stood up at the prisoner's bar and pleaded guilty, like a man, to an assault on his mother-in-law. His Honor Snell was astounded.

"Do you mean to say," he observed to the policeman's victim, "that you actually beak this woman, being in full possession of your faculties?"

"Well I should smile, Judge!" was the beak this woman, being in full possession of your faculties?"

"Well I should smile, Judge!" was the response; "a man can't shoulder everything, can he?"

"Well, no," responded Snell, who had, perhaps, a dim recollection of his more bouyant days, and he relaxed his stern manner and rather interestedly asked the cause of John Crafter's trouble.

"Well, your honor," said John, "I was out last evening with a party of friends and went home illuminated, perhaps, but not drunk. The mother-in-law collared me on entering my house and demanded to know whether I was prepared to purchase a carriage for the baby. Now that was an expensive luxury in which a man does not often indulge. Servant girls are cheap, and I am opposed, on general principles, to encouraging such reckless extravagance. I told the madam "No," Then there was a circus. She pounded me, Your Honor, unmercifully, and before I knew it I was fired out of my own house and escorted to a police mation by an officer. Do you imagine that I was wrong in kicking?"

The Court was dublous. Beating a woman was an infraction of the law, and bulldozing a man into purchasing a baby carriage was an outrage. Beating against bulldozing was unequal, in His Honor's private opinion, and Crafter, after due consideration of his case, was dismissed with a slight reprimand. This was looked upon as rather partial by some of the thugs, who watched Crafter disap-

Oh Johnny Crafter, is there no hereafter For settling accounts for dreadful sins, You beat your mother-in-law, You smashed her in the jaw, And yet you remain upon your pins.

It is clear, Johnny dear,
That you got upon your ear;
But His Honor is one of the boys.
He has given you the slip,
And stretched the legal grip,
And on mothers in-law won't make a noise

The New Police Station.

It was stated in yesterday's CRITIC that the Commissioners had decided to adopt the the Commissioners had decided to adopt the plans for the new station-house without alteration. The statement was gladly received by all those who realize that this action of the Commissioners will give the District the finest building for this purpose to be found outside of New York city.

The project has had many difficulties to surmount, first, owing to a doubt whether the District authorities were authorized by the act of Congress to purchase a site, and subsequently by other difficulties, principally in finding a location.

subsequently by other difficulties, principally in finding a location.

Seventh and O streets seemed the only place available and suitable, and its selection caused strong opposition; the erection of a station-house between two large schools called forth a very sensible and logical list of objections from the school trustees, who revolted at the idea of dragging drunkards and thieves under the noses of the children and bringing the innocent involuntarily into the presence of the crimiinvoluntarily into the presence of the crimi-nal classes; the removal of prisoners from cell to van always lends an unwholesome charm to the passer-by, and the screams and shrieks of the intoxicated or insane are and shrieks of the intoxicated or insane are not good music for the juvenile car.

These reasons were all forcibly presented. but were met by other arguments. Many persons held that if it was not suitable to have police stations adjoining schools, it cer-tainly was to have them near markets, as would be the case at Seventh and O streets; others stated their belief that police vigi-lance was very necessary for the exterior of others stated their belief that police vigilance was very necessary for the exterior of schools and always welcomed by the teacher as a protection from insult, especially to female pupils. Besides the pupils are apt to depredate our trees and other property, and the proximity of a police station, it is believed, would tend to prevent that.

The new police station is not to be ranked with the old ones, which are in a measure public nuisances; it will be free from many of the old faults, the prisoners will be conveyed from and to the van into a yard hidden from the public streets, and the station built with a view to quiet, order and cleanliness.

The plans which Mr. Lauritzen has made The plans which Mr. Lauritzen has made have met with high praise from Major Twining and all others who have seen them, and the building when completed will be an ornament to the city.

The place named is the lot on Seventh street originally purchased of Mr. Corcoran for a market. On this lot, which comprises the Seventh-street half of square No. 446, now stands the Henry school building, nearly completed, and here Congress has ordered the new high-school building to be located. These two buildings will accommodate between sixteen hundred and two thousand pupils; and now come the two thousand pupils; and now come the Commissioners and propose to erect on the same lot, side by side with those school buildings, a police station-louse, with all accessories, such as prison-cells, stables, &c. OHIO POLITICS.

Hon. John G. Thompson's Views. A paragraph having appeared in one of the Baltimore papers that Hon. John G. Thompson, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives and chairman of the Democratic state committee of Ohio, had resigned the latter position, and that ex-Congressman Warner had been selected in his place. Congressman Warner had been selected in his place, a CRITIC interviewer, desiring to know whether Mr. Thompson had relinquished his hold on the party's tail in Ohio, sought out that gentleman and learned that there was not the slightest foundation for the statement. "General Warner," said Mr. Thompson, "is a candidate for the position of chairman of the State committee, but the election does not take place until next year. I cannot see what could have given rise to the report that I had resigned." Mr. Thompson was asked what he thought of the chances of his party for success in the coming gubernatorial election in his State. He said:

"If our party makes a wise selection

He said:

"If our party makes a wise selection of candidates I feel very sanguine that we can win next fall. "You see," continued Mr. Thompson, "there is considerable apathy and dissension just now in the ranks of the Republican party throughout the country, and we must take advantage of those circumstances and nominate our best men."

best men.".

"Whom do you regard as the strongest candidates for governor you could put in the field?" asked the reporter.

"Well," said Mr. Thompson, "Ohio is a great State, and we have many great men. The candidates most spoken of now, besides Mr. Thurman, who has positively declined a nomination, are Hon. John F. Follett, ex-Congressman Henry B. Banning, and John W. Bookwalter. The latter is a prominent manufacturer and has had very little experience in politics. He would make a good run. Follett and Banning are both good men, either one of whom would poll a large vote."

General Rousseau's Son Dying the Death of a Tramp.

On Sunday morning, June 6, the engineer of a train on the Maine Central railroad, as of a train on the Maine Central railroad, as he was approaching Topsham, saw what he took to be a sleeper lying near the track some distance ahead. As he drew near he discovered that the object was a man lying near the rails. He applied the brakes, and the train passed the man at a rate of speed not faster than an ordinary walk. The train was stopped and the engineer, running to the depot, reported that a drunken man was lying near the track. A hand-car was sent out and the man was taken to the station, where he gave his name as Richard Rosscau. He was a tramp and was severely injured, apparently by being struck by an engine. He was taken to the county poorhouse, where he soon after died. He declared that he was a son of the Union Major-Govern I was severed to the track that the was a son of the Union Major-Govern I was severed to the track the was a son of the Union Major-Govern I was severed to the was a son of the Union Major-Govern I was severed to the track the was a son of the Union Major-Govern I was severed to the was a son of the Union Major-Govern I was severed to the track the was a son of the Union Major-Govern I was severed to the track the was a son of the Union Major-Govern I was severed to the track the was a son of the Union Major-Govern I was severed to the track the house, where he soon after died. A letter to the board of selectmen of Topsham from Thomas Mel-ville, governor of Sailors' Snug Harbor, con-firmed his story.

Here will be brought all the quinkands, thieves, prostitutes, and murderers which may be found in that part of the city for temporary confinement. Here these two thousand school children will learn from actual observation the ways of crime and criminals. They cannot help seeing and hearing what is brought so directly under their notice. It only remains to erect a small-pox hospital on the other corner of the lot to make the facilities for a practical education of these children complete. Their bodies as well as morals will then be provided for.

But as loss of caste on either side was sure to follow the postponement of marriage beyond the day and the hour fixed for it, the friends of the girl succeeded in hunting out a widower, and those of the boy were also fortunate enough to secure the hand of a girl of 9, and thus, in place of one, two weddings took place at the same time.

In 1864 a western cavalryman named Drake was out foraging in the Shenandoah Valley in company with a comrade named Cooper. Cooper was in a smoke-house after meat and Drake was on guard at the door when thirteen Confederates suddenly appeared. They were mounted and advanced at a gallop, part of them firing as they rode up. One bullet found a suitable opening in the stone wall of the smoke-house and flew and killed Cooper dead in his track. Drake was standing beside his horse, and his saddle was hit by three bullets, one of which glanced through his hat.

As soon as the trooper could realize what had happened he swung himself into the saddle and dushed at the circle around him. The moment he appeared in view he was a target for carbine and pistol. His horse made a rush at the line, but was driven back. Followed by Cooper's horse, he galloped around and across a circle not over 100 feet across, all the time under a steady fire by the Confederates. This fire was soon returned by Drake, who fired away seven cartridges and then drew his sabre. His seven bullets, as afterward vouched for, killed two men, wounded two more, and killed one horse. His fire broke the circle and he got out of it, but for thirty rods, as he rode off, he was exposed to the fire of nine or ten men. Drake's horse was hit no less than nine times and yet not disabled. As for the rider, his comrades, on his return to camp, counted up a record of truly miraculous escape. Three bullets struck his sabre, two his hat, four went through his clothing, one burned his cheek, one raked his knee, and two hit his left boot. While one single bullet killed his cheek, one raked his knee, and two hit his left boot. While one single bullet killed the one trooper, the other had sixteen fired point blank at him and yet did not lose a drop of blood. Cooper's horse was killed by one bullet, while nine failed to disable the larger and more exposed animal

Working a Free-Lunch Route.

An old horse, all ribs and hipbones, attached to a dray, was leaning up against a hitching-post on North Howard street yesterday, dreamily figuring out the result of the year's oat crop, when a wagon load of hay passed by. He heard the rustle of the dry provender, and turning one car around, and ascertaining to his satisfaction that the driver was out of view, he started out after the hay and followed it all the way down to Lexington street, to the immeasurable Lexington street, to the immeasurable amusement of the many pedestrians. "That hoss is workin' his lunch route like a major," said a bag-lifter, pausing in his work and grinning. "Yes," responded another, "an' he's stuffin' that old mouldy hay in his ribs 'zif he was a thrashin' machine." "Go it, old pony, I'll back you every time," chimed in another. "Run out en loosen his throatlatch an take the bit out'n his mouth, so'z to give him a far show," yelled a fourth, and amid a chorus of cries of this character the old pony turned the corner, munching away with perfect contentment. About four minutes afterward a colored drayman came down the street, like the en-tire social circle from Hades was in his rear,
